mapping of restriction sites on plasmid dna edvo-kit #105. this data shows that the cleavage site at b is closest to a since cleavage a+b generated the smallest fragment (500) out of all the pairs of enzymes. the shortest distance dna lab: restriction mapping - biolympiads - restriction mapping is used to determine the distance between the sites where restriction enzymes cut and to order the different sites relative to each other. the cut sites serve as landmarks when keeping track of several pieces of dna. genetic and physical maps can be correlated to identify the dna sequences encoding a particular trait. plasmid mapping exercise answer key -
